Arbitration Experience

Judith Levine is a member of the international arbitration group in the New York office of global law firm White & Case LLP. She has represented corporations and sovereign states in disputes in Asia, North America, Latin America, the Middle East and Europe, including under the Rules of the ICC, ICSID, the AAA and UNCITRAL. These matters have involved the application of civil and common law and relate to diverse industries including oil & gas, power generation, telecommunications, banking, construction and pharmaceuticals. Judith also advises clients on drafting dispute resolution clauses for international contracts and on matters of public international law, such as state responsibility, treaty interpretation, and land and maritime boundary delimitations.

Career

Prior to joining White & Case in 2003, Judith worked at the International Court of Justice in The Hague, The Netherlands. Judith's legal experience in Australia includes serving as an adviser to the Commonwealth Attorney-General, an associate to Justice Michael McHugh AC at the High Court of Australia and teaching contract law at the University of New South Wales. Judith has presented seminars and conference papers on international investment arbitration, including for the Australia New Zealand Society for International Law Annual Conference and the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators Diploma Course in International Arbitration. Judith has published articles and organised conferences on various aspects of international law and arbitral practice. She is a member of the American Society of International Law, Arbitral Women, the Young Arbitrators Forum of the US Council for International Business, and the International Law Section of the Law Council of Australia.
